FIRST INTERNATIONAL SYMPOSIUM ON GENDER IDENTITY

This Symposium aims to focus attention on the problem of gender identity disorientation, not only as a psychiatric entity but as an area requiring specialised medical study and treatment as well as social understanding

Much has still to be learned about the transsexual phenomenon—the fixed conviction of an individual that his or her psychological sex does not conform to their anatomical sex—roughly estimated to occur in one in every 100,000 children. Transsexuals (who are usually neither homosexual nor transvestite) are often socially maladjusted and, if denied positive help, may commit suicide

Since 1953, some 1,000 conversion operations have taken place in various parts of the world. There are now six gender identity units functioning in the United States, where hundreds of patients are receiving pre-operative hormonal treatment, sometimes followed by surgery, from a growing network of specialists concerned to alleviate their condition. In Britain the treatment of transsexuals has also been undertaken by specialising teams of psychiatrists, physicians and surgeons but there is as yet no permanent gender identity unit

In addition to the medical and research aspects of the problem, there is urgent need for greater academic and professional understanding and for education of the public at large. Recent legal decisions, reports in the scientific press, and current books and articles on the subject, as well as activity in the psychotherapeutic and social work fields, are all helpful; but these mark merely the beginning of what must be a wholehearted effort to initiate, encourage and co-ordinate an intensive programme of study and help

The international co-operation of scientists, researchers, teachers and social workers, as well as the active assistance of socially concerned citizens and the use of every medium of communication, are needed to make the public aware of the scope of this problem, and of the need to reduce the social waste and human misery associated with it was founded in 1958 to promote psychological health through research, education and social action. It is especially concerned with psycho-sexual difficulties and has so far worked mainly upon the personal and social problems of homosexuality

THE ALBANY TRUST

The Trust is also concerned at the increasing evidence which its casework is revealing of need in other deviant areas, and this Symposium is the outcome of its involvement since late in 1967 with the phenomena of transvestism and transsexualism

The Trust's friendly links with the Erickson Educational Foundation, which is promoting research and experimental work in the United States, have proved a particularly happy means of bringing together American, European and British specialists for this international discussion

is primarily a medical research foundation engaged in the conduct of investigations, experiments, and studies to discover, develop, or verify knowledge relating to the causes, diagnosis, treatment, prevention or control of physical or mental diseases and impairment of men and women

Within this framework, one of the purposes of this tax exempt foundation has been to underwrite or initiate essential but unusual medical type research projects that might find support difficult to come by from the larger foundations. Emphasis is on support of endeavours likely to lead to permanent benefits rather than to temporary alleviation
